

The Guild's members believe in the fundamental rights of students to choose abortion as a form of healthcare and make informed choices about their own bodily autonomy. The members of the Guild of Students believe that students who could benefit from accessing information about reproductive healthcare should be supported.

The Guild's members are concerned that anti-choice protests may cause distress and intimidation to students. This includes on campus and in relation to providers of reproductive care that University of Birmingham students may access in the local community. The Guild (insofar as permitted by general law and charity law) should support students who are pro-choice and want to campaign on behalf of Birmingham students on this issue.

The Guild should signpost University of Birmingham students towards free, impartial, confidential and non-judgmental advice and services that informs students of their full range of options.
